

Dr. Hideyuki Yoshitomi, MD, PhD graduated from Chiba University, School of Medicine and finished internship and residency of Department of General Surgery, Chiba university hospital. He also worked as post doctoral fellow in Professor Ken Zaret's lab in Fox Chase Cancer Center in Philadelphia, USA and involved in the basic research work related to pancreatic development and oncology. The present position is Associate professor of Department of General Surgery, Chiba University, Graduate School of Medicine. He is interesting in the development of multidisciplinary treatment for pancreatic cancer combining the aggressive surgical resection and chemotherapy, and have conducted several multicenter clinical trials for adjuvant and neoadjuvant chemotherapy for pancreatic cancer. He is a councilor of Japanese Pancreatic Society and a member of committee of general rules for the study of pancreatic cancer (Japan Pancreatic Society).